Note on sources for sub-national indicator 1c: Before 2007 or 2008 to be more precise, NGOs operated under the Business Association or Association Law. But as of 2007/08 this has slightly changed. CSOs can operate under th and would require no registration with the Ministry of Planning, thus requiring no disclosure, but in such case, they considered NGOs by the government, they are or would be considered as Association which can come into being of the legislature (for example groups like Federation of Liberian Youth, Liberia National Student Union or Young Association, all enacted by legislation. All of these group still optionally registered with Planning as NGO’s and are disclose as per the new guidelines, i.e NGO Guidelines) or they can do both, get incorporated by the Ministry of Fc and apply for NGO registration. When they apply for an NGO registration, they are require to disclose. Thus depend way groups come to being in a county, the answer may be no” or “yes”. Most groups in Montserrado or counties cl has access to the ministry of planning. But it is however keen to note that prior to June 1, 2008, no groups were re disclose as per regulation. Disclosure was arbitrarily required as indicated by ministry of planning re-accreditation I never supported by any guidelines or law.

YES: A YES score is earned if anti-corruption/good governance CSOs at the sub-national level are required to disclose their sources of funding.

Civil society organizations focused on anti-corruption or good governance at the sub-national level are an essential component of the political process. CSOs provide widely valued insights and have political power. Those CSOs play a leading role in shaping public opinion on political matters.

Anti-corruption/good governance CSOs at the sub-national level are active, but may not be relevant to policymaking at the sub-national level. Those CSOs are willing to articulate opinions on political matters, but have little access to local decision makers. They have some influence over public opinion, but considerably less than other political figures.

Anti-corruption/good governance CSOs at the sub-national level are effectively prohibited from engaging in the political process. Those CSOs are unwilling to take positions on political issues. They are not relevant to changes in public policy.

YES: A YES score is earned if there were no documented cases of journalists being killed because of their work related to corruption at the sub-national level during the study period. A YES score is positive.

NO: A NO score is earned if there were any documented cases where a journalist was killed in relation to his or her work on corruption-related issues at the sub-national level in the study period. The relationship between a mystery and an individual’s work may not be clear, however the burden of proof here is low. If it is a reasonable guess that the individual was killed in relation to his or her work on corruption issues, then the indicator is scored as a NO. Corruption is broadly defined to include any abuses of power, not just the passing of bribes.

The chief executive at the sub-national level utilizes executive orders only when there is no constitutional or legal requirement for official legislative action or approval. Executive orders are limited in number and narrow in scope.

The chief executive at the sub-national level sometimes relies on executive orders to implement policies and opposed by the legislature. Some executive orders are overly broad in scope and are designed to circumvent constitutional or legal requirements for legislative action or approval.

The chief executive at the sub-national level routinely abuses executive orders to render the sub-national legislature practically useless. Executive orders are the norm, not the exception, and directly contravene constitutional or legal requirements for legislative action or approval.

Clear rules are followed distinguishing sub-national government functions from party activities. Sub-national government funds are never used for party activities. The civil service is completely distinct from party bureaucracy.

The ruling party is, in principal, separate from the sub-national government, but exceptions to this standard occur. Examples may be the use of civil servants to organize political rallies, use of government vehicles on campaign, or use of government funds for party purposes.

The sub-national government bureaucracy is an extension of the ruling party. There are few boundaries between national government and party activities. Sub-national government funds, equipment and personnel are regularly used to support party activities.

100: Civil servants at the sub-national level operate independently of the political process, without incentive or pressure to render favorable treatment or policy decisions on politically sensitive issues. Civil servants at the sub-national level are typically independent, yet are sometimes influenced in their judgments by negative or positive political or personal incentives. This may include favorable or unfavorable treatment by superiors or praise by the sub-national government, or other forms of influence. Civil servants at the sub-national level can bring a case to the judicial system challenging politically-motivated firings, but the case may encounter delays or hurdles.

Civil servants at the sub-national level almost always have formal job descriptions establishing levels of assigned functions, and compensation. Job descriptions are a reliable means to map positions to both human capital requirements (including the position’s authority and responsibilities) and base pay.

Civil servants at the sub-national level often have formal job descriptions, but exceptions exist. Some sub-national civil servants may not be part of the formal assignment of duties and compensations. Some job descriptions may not to pay or responsibilities in some cases.

Civil servants at the sub-national level do not have formal roles or job descriptions. If they do, such job descriptions little or nothing to do with the position’s responsibilities, authority, or pay.

In practice, civil servant bonuses at the sub-national level constitute only a small faction of total pay.

Bonuses at the county level for civil servant constitute a small faction of the staff pay. Bonuses are determine by the manager.

Sub-national civil servant bonuses constitute no more than 10% of total pay and do not represent a major portion of take-home pay.
Sub-national civil servant bonuses are generally a small percentage of total take-home pay for most local civil servants, though exceptions exist where some sub-national civil servants’ bonuses represent a significant part of total pay. Most sub-national civil servants receive bonuses that represent a significant amount of total take-home pay. In some cases bonuses represent the majority of total pay to sub-national civil servants.

In practice, the government publishes the number of authorized civil service positions along with the number actually filled at the sub-national level. The sub-national government publishes such a list on a regular basis. The sub-national government publishes such a list but it is often delayed or incomplete. There may be multiple delays between each successive publication. The sub-national government rarely or never publishes such a list, or when it does it is wholly incomplete.

In practice, the independent redress mechanism for the civil service at the sub-national level is effective.

The regulations restricting post-government private sector employment for civil servants at the sub-national level uniformly enforced. There are no or few cases of sub-national civil servants taking jobs in the private sector after government where they directly lobby or seek to influence their former government colleagues without an adequate cooling off period.

The regulations are generally enforced though some exceptions exist. In certain sectors, civil servants at the national level are known to regularly take jobs in the private sector that entail directly lobbying or seeking to influence former government colleagues. Cooling off periods are short and sometimes ignored.

The regulations are rarely or never enforced. Civil servants at the sub-national level routinely take jobs in the sector following government employment that involve direct lobbying or influencing of former government colleagues. Cooling off periods are non-existent or never enforced.

In practice, the regulations governing gifts and hospitality offered to civil servants at the sub-national level are regularly enforced to sufficiently restrict the amounts of gifts and hospitality that can be given to civil servants. Sub-national civil servants rarely accept gifts or hospitality above what is allowed.

Partnerships among private businesses, civil society, and government institutions play a key role in anti-corruption reform at the sub-national level. They develop a broad coalition to monitor and foster public awareness of corruption and initiate various forms of advocacy. Partners include journalists, NGO representatives, academics, government officials, leaders, and lawyers, all of whom remain independent from political interference.

Partnerships among private businesses, civil society, and government institutions play a role in anti-corruption reform at the sub-national level, but there are some problems. The system of coordination among partners is occasionally leading to incoherent goals and sporadic initiatives that are difficult to sustain. In some cases, the appeals mechanism is not an affordable option to citizens seeking to challenge criminal judgments. The prohibitive cost of utilizing the appeals mechanism prevents citizens from challenging criminal judgments.

50. In practice, do judgments in the criminal system at the sub-national level follow written law?
Judgments in the criminal system at the sub-national level are made according to established legal code. There are no exceptional cases in which individuals are treated by a separate process. Political interference, bribery, cronyism or other flaws are rarely factors in judicial outcomes.

Judgments in the criminal system usually follow the protocols of written law. There are sometimes exceptional cases in which political concerns, corruption or other flaws in the system decide outcomes.

Judgments in the criminal system are often decided by factors other than written law. Bribery and corruption in the judicial process are common elements affecting decisions.

Sub-national judges operate independently of the political process, without incentive or pressure to render judgments in politically sensitive cases. Sub-national judges never comment on political debates. Individual judges rarely praised or criticized by political figures.

Sub-national judges are typically independent, yet are sometimes influenced in their judgments by negative political incentives. This may include favorable or unfavorable treatment by the government or public criticism. Sub-national judges may be demoted or relocated in retaliation for unfavorable decisions.

Sub-national judges are commonly influenced by politics and personal biases or incentives. This may include family relationships, professional partnerships, or other personal loyalties. Negative incentives may include demotions, relocation, threats or harassment.
